School of Nursing

Probationary Tenure-Track Appointments

Dalhousie University School of Nursing is undergoing an exciting and transformative period in its development and is seeking three full-time probationary tenure-track appointments effective July 1, 2019. These positions are subject to final budgetary approval.

Situated in the Faculty of Health, the School of Nursing offers programs leading to a Bachelor of Science in Nursing with multiple streams; a Master of Nursing in variety of specialties including nurse practitioner; and a PhD (Nursing) focusing on the impact of nursing practices on health outcomes for individuals, families, communities and/or populations.

At the time of appointment, successful candidates will have completed a research-based doctoral degree in a health-related discipline, have a record of external funding and research publications, and have demonstrated a commitment to developing excellence in their teaching, research and practice. Candidates will be expected to develop and maintain a rigorous externally funded research program.

The primary responsibilities of the successful candidate will include teaching and supervision of undergraduate and graduate students, maintaining a vibrant program of research and publication, and contributing to academic/collegial life of the School and University and to the broader community. Of particular interest are candidates with expertise in either adult, senior care or mental health, together with quantitative research methods and/or translational research. As well, a background in some combination of leadership, knowledge mobilization, diversity and inclusiveness in healthcare. Interprofessional education and simulation-based education would be considered strong assets; distance and context-based learning, would be considered as added assets.

Eligibility for registration with the College of Registered Nurses of Nova Scotia is a requirement.

A complete application is comprised of (1) a covering letter outlining your experience, major contributions to teaching, research and practice, and the contribution you envisage making to the School, the discipline and professions; (2) a curriculum vitae; (3) reprints of at least two representative published papers and; (4) a completed Self-Identification Questionnaire, available at www.dal.ca/becounted/selfid.

The deadline for applications is Friday, February 1, 2019.
