

Public Service Employee Survey (PSES)

The Public Service Employee Survey (PSES) is now available for use by researchers in the Atlantic Research Data Centre.

The Public Service Employment Survey was first launched in 1997 in order to gather useful information regarding public service employees' perceptions on multiple aspects of their jobs. The effects of program reviews, government restructuring, increased workload and rapid technological advances are among factors influencing the work of federal Public Service employees. This information is vital for managers in the public service who further look at these findings and use them to determine specific areas of improvement within their department such as modifications to the managerial policies and practices.

The survey results are used to develop action plans at the level of the department, sector or branch and ultimately at the work unit level. The results also contribute to the future corporate management agenda. The survey will provide a foundation for which future progress in renewing the workplace can be measured.

For more information on The Public Service Employee Survey:

<http://www23.statcan.gc.ca/imdb/p2SV.pl?Function=getSurvey&SurvId=56747&InstalId=116444&SDDS=4438>

For more information on the ARDC and application procedures:

<http://atlanticresearchdatacentre.dal.ca/>

ardc@dal.ca

902-494-1545